Campus parking problems plague colleges nationwide

There is a universal problem that affects college campuses across the United States: Student parking. The mere mention of the issue ignites controversy among resident students, commuter students, campus security and local police departments. As colleges expand their student body and begin to run short on space, parking availability is usually one of the first things to be s a c r i f i c e d . Campuses across the nation are re-configuring their parking systems, and most of the changes involve more restrictions for student drivers. But even though students tend to be the ones most affected concerning parking restrictions, faculty members are being hurt by parking restrictions as well. School administrators are struggling to find solutions to the ongoing problems. Due to the lack of space on most campuses, there is often no more room for parking lots. Students are advised to utilize the bus systems in larger cities in order to get to their classes. But for many college students who grew up in the suburbs where using cars was the norm, public transportation is not typically an appealing option.

Featured Police Department Member:

Shirley Mulligan
Substitute Dispatcher

Shirley was born in Los Angeles and graduated high school in Long Beach. She was later hired as a police dispatcher for the city of Long Beach. Shirley moved to the Inland Empire and became a dispatcher for the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department. Shirley is currently a sub-dispatcher for the SBCCD police and is a volunteer for the Sheriff's Department Highland Station and Explorer advisor. Shirley and her husband live in Highland with their two children.
