Securing Your Vehicle from Theft

According to the 2006 FBI Crime Statistics, once every 26.4 seconds in the United States a vehicle is stolen - and theft from vehicles occurs far more frequently. While conventional alarms, steering wheel locks, ignition cutoffs, vehicle tracking systems, and other anti-theft devices help deter thieves from breaking into your car or stealing it, there are some basic, common-sense measures that you can take to minimize the chances that your parked vehicle will be targeted in the first place:

Always lock all doors and close windows, even if you're going to be parked for a very short time. Never leave your car running while you run into a convenience store, go to an ATM, etc.

Park in a well-lighted area. Find a space near a store entrance or higher-traffic area, never in an outlying, deserted parking area.

Don't leave any valuables in the car. Keep any loose objects in the trunk or in storage bins under the seat. A blanket covering things can be an obvious invitation for a break-in. Minimize the number of small objects in your car-they're great bait for thieves!

Choose an open, visible space. If you have a small car, try to avoid parking next to large trucks and SUVs, which give thieves good cover from security cameras and passers-by.

Never hide spare keys in or around the car. Experienced thieves know all the hiding places.

Use a sound system with a detachable face, or a sound system that can be removed completely from the vehicle.

Don't lock your glove box, and don't keep valuables in it. If your car is broken into, a locked glove box can be an invitation for an annoyed petty thief to tear your dashboard up to get it open. Do not store your vehicle's title in the glove compartment or anywhere else in the car.

Don't ever think that your car is too old and worn to be the target of thieves. Most often, stolen cars are stripped for parts rather than for resale, and the overall condition of the car makes little difference. High-tech alarm systems may thwart break-in attempts, but usually some damage results. The best protection against thieves is to make your car unattractive to them in the first place.
