Smoking Enforcement

Starting January 2013, The District Police Department will start issuing citations for those who smoke outside the designated areas. This is in accordance with California Government Code 7597.1(A) and Board Policy 3570. The civil penalty (fine) is $50.00

Remote keyless entry has been around for a while – since the late 1980s, in fact – and today it's almost standard on all new cars. But the pervasiveness of this feature is not without consequence. The most advanced keyless systems are passive, meaning you can just approach your car and it recognizes you by the fob on your body. No buttons need to be pressed. As researchers point out, this technology can make vehicle theft a breeze for a savvy thief.

These remote keyless-entry systems use radio waves that typically are specific to a manufacturer, and the signals are usually encrypted. When your vehicle's key fob is within 20 feet of the car, you're allowed to transmit a signal to unlock the doors, pop the trunk, remote start your car (when equipped) or activate the car alarm. Researchers discovered that these encrypted signals are easy to intercept and trick. The theft works by setting up two antennas, one near the targeted vehicle and one near the holder of the key fob — be it in a purse, bag or pocket. This equipment can usually be purchased for $100 to $1,000. The person with the antenna aimed at the owner of the key fob needs to get within 26 feet of the target. In a store, this could be a few aisles away, so as to not arouse suspicion.

Once the antenna is near the intended victim's key fob, the key transmits a low-power signal to the antenna, which is then relayed to the antenna near the vehicle. Once that occurs, the thief can unlock the doors and drive away (if the vehicle has push-button start).

Researchers hacked into eight car manufacturers' passive-entry systems using this method. No cryptography or protocol could stop it.

While this system may seem fairly complicated, it could catch on with car thieves because of the cost of the equipment and anonymity. However, the hack cannot start the cars with traditional keys. Today's ignition systems are increasingly complicated and secure. That's one reason why car thefts are largely on the decline in the U.S.

A computer science professor said there are probably easier ways to steal cars, but the "nasty aspect of high-tech car theft" is that it doesn't leave any sign of forced entry. That could lead to problems with police and insurance companies in tracking down the criminals or with filing claims.

Right now, the only way to protect yourself is by either shielding your key fob's radio with a guard or leaving your key fob at home.

MISSION STATEMENT

The SBCCD Police Department, in concert with the Board of Trustees, is committed to providing a safe and secure learning and working environment for all students and employees. This will be accomplished through a cooperative and coordinated effort involving all departments and the SBCCD employees, law enforcement agencies and community.
