Crime Rises Across College Campuses

In 2002, the Secret Service released a report on school shootings in the United States. The project, part of their Safe School Initiative, studied 37 incidents in 28 years, and among their key findings, noted that: "incidents of targeted violence at school rarely are sudden, impulsive acts" that is, even killers didn't "just snap" and that only some of the shootings were preventable.

Sadly, in the eight years since the Safe School Initiative was released, America witnessed multiple campus shootings at places such as Virginia Tech, prompting Campus, another more comprehensive report on crime, violence and shootings specifically on college campuses. The FBI, Secret Service and Department of Education each contributed to the report.

The study included all forms of targeted violence that occurred on a campus between January 1, 1900 and December 31, 2008. In 108 years of data, the project studied 272 documented incidents of targeted violence on campus. These incidents added up to 281 deaths and 247 injuries. (By necessity, the study did not account for any unreported crimes). Also excluded are crimes that occurred after December 31, 2008.

College campuses usually comprise many buildings, often with larger classrooms, separate faculty for each department, more uncontrolled access and egress, and irregular student schedules that minimize regular contact between educators and students," the report states. "These factors are less conducive to observing and recognizing behavioral concerns among the student population."

In other words, multiple factors on a college environment make these crimes even less preventable. In fact, the report states that there were warning signs or "concerning behaviors" present in only 31% of the cases. That means that a sturdy 69% of attackers don't exhibit detectable signs or behaviors – which are already harder to notice on campus.

Maybe that's why college campuses across the nation saw 3,287 rapes, 60 killings, 5,026 assaults and 4,562 robberies just in 2008.

MISSION STATEMENT

Crime Rises Across College Campuses (con't)

One of the most disturbing trends is the dramatic rise in crimes in recent decades. The survey spanned 108 years, yet 60% of incidents were recorded within the past 20 years. The number of documented incidents has risen every decade since 1900.

The report includes many other illuminating facts about campus violence:

- 79% of attacks occurred on the college campus grounds
- 26% of attackers committed suicide after their attack
- Attackers' ages ranged between 16 and 68, but only 8% of attackers had any kind of criminal history
- 21% of the attacks or killings were random
- Guns were only used in attacks 54% of the time
- Females are disproportionately at risk, because a majority of college patrons (57% of students and 54% of faculty) are female
