Staying Safe In a High-Tech World

We are living in an increasingly “plugged in” world. Crimes are moving online and into social networks with us. More than 300,000 Internet crime complaints valued at over $500 million were received at the Internet Crime Complaint Center (IC3) in 2011, 2012 Internet Crime Report. Citizens can learn how to protect themselves and their families from the variety of crimes that can happen online, such as children sending personal images by phone or email, unscrupulous merchants trying to sell faulty goods, and scammers trying to steal your identity. Below are some tips to help protect yourself and your family from internet crime.

- ◆ Don't provide personal or financial information, user names, or passwords in response to an email, because legitimate companies generally don't seek such information in this way.
- ◆ If you question whether an email is really from a legitimate business you know, contact the business using a phone number or web address other than the one provided in the email, and ask if the business sent it.
- ◆ Tell your kids why it's important to keep some things about themselves, family members, and friends to themselves. Information like their Social Security number, street address, phone number, and family financial information; say, bank account or credit card numbers is private and should stay that way.
- ◆ Research shows that teens who don't talk about sex with strangers online are less likely to come in contact with predators. In fact, researchers have found that predators usually don't pose as children or teens, and most teens who are contacted by adults they don't know find it creepy. Teens should not hesitate to ignore or block them.
- ◆ Teach your kids to be polite offline; talk to them about being courteous online as well. Texting may seem fast and impersonal, yet courtesies like "pls" and "ty" (for please and thank you) are common text terms.
