Computer Safety Tips

In an era when some say Kindles will replace textbooks and teachers distribute school-issued laptops instead of lined paper, computers are an essential component of higher education.

But that new, gleaming desktop or laptop you are taking to college or work is only as good as the data it stores. Protecting irreplaceable computer files and systems against identity theft, havoc-wreaking viruses and spyware is often forgotten and only remembered after the data is lost.

We suggests purchasing the right software. While some colleges have agreements for licensing rights to provide students with free computer security protection, not all schools do this.
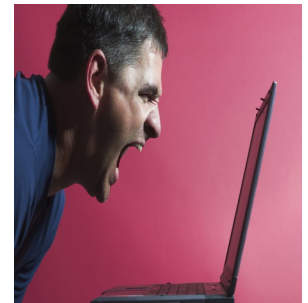

So, finding a comprehensive security suite with defenses against spam, spyware, viruses and phishing is vital.

1) Use antivirus software and keep it up-to-date. You should check for new definition updates daily. Most antivirus software can be configured to do this automatically.

2) Install security patches. Vulnerabilities in software are constantly being discovered and they don't discriminate by vendor or platform. It's not simply a matter of updating Windows; at least monthly, check for and apply updates for all software you use.

3) Use a firewall. No Internet connection is safe without one. Firewalls are necessary even if you have a dial-up Internet connection. It takes only minutes for a non-firewalled computer to be infected.

4) Secure your browser. Many labor under the dangerous misconception that only Internet Explorer is a problem. It's not the browser you need to be concerned about. Nor is it a matter of simply avoiding certain 'types' of sites. Known, legitimate websites are frequently being compromised and implanted with malicious JavaScript that foists malware onto visitors' computers. To ensure optimum browsing safety, the best tip is to disable JavaScript for all but the most essential of sites -- such as your banking or regular ecommerce sites. Not only will you enjoy safer browsing, you'll be able to eliminate unwanted pop-ups as well.
