DRIVING IN HIGH WINDS

Bad weather causes car accidents. Roughly a quarter of them, according to the Department of Transportation, high winds, tornadoes, hurricanes, and tropical storms can change the way you drive. Below are a few safety tips for driving in high winds:

Slow down

Crosswinds make it harder to control your vehicle, especially if you drive a truck, RV or bus.

Don't stop on a bridge

Stopping your car when the wind is strong can be more dangerous than driving through it.

Keep both hands on the wheel

Whenever you drive through unpredictable conditions, keep your hands at 9 and 3 (or 8 and 4). This will help you react to sudden gusts or unexpected moves by drivers around you.

Stay away from trucks and buses

If you think it's hard to control your car during high winds, imagine what it must be like to drive a bus or semi. Steer clear.

Watch for downed power lines

High winds can knock down power lines. Beware of them during and after high winds and call 9-1-1 if you come across any.

Watch out for flying debris

Crazy winds can cause building damage, downed trees, and other debris to fly into the road and toward your car. It may take awhile for the roads to get cleaned up, so be a little extra cautious for a few days after the storm.

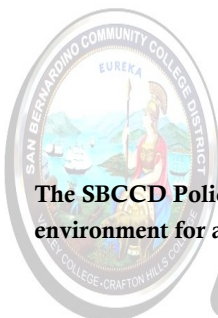

Prepare an emergency kit

Before you leave the house, store these items in your vehicle just in case:

Food and water

Extra gas (this will come in handy if you're stuck in traffic while trying to evacuate)

Cell phone and charger
