SCHOOL SCAMS AND SPAM ALERT

Work-from-home Scam

The arrival of internet and widespread use of mobile communication and social networking made it easier for scammers to target millions of people with bogus offers. College students are vulnerable prey of this ploy as one tries to earn extra monies to survive the financial burden of being at school working through a degree.

FBI warns college students across the country as they are being targeted to participate in a work-from-home scam. Students will receive an email recruiting them for payroll or human resources positions. It will require for one to provide a bank account number to receive a deposit and be able to transfer a portion of the funds into another account. These funds are stolen money, and participating could result in the student's bank account being closed and face federal charges. Be wary!

School Employee Scam

Another scam targets school employees. Fraudulent emails are deployed indicating a need to change one's status with Human Resources. A website link is provided that will require a log-in to see the supposed change in your employment status. However, the website provided steals employee's credentials. FBI warns that the scam artist will take the credentials, log-in to your "real" human resources portal and change your direct deposit information.

Be cautious and do not open unsolicited emails! Always take an extra step to verify with your Information Technology Department or the supposed sender, in this case—Human Resources Department—if such is a valid information and/or directives.
