MISSION STATEMENT

The SBCCD Police Department, in concert with the Board of Trustees, is committed to providing a safe and secure learning and working environment for all students and employees. This will be accomplished through a cooperative and coordinated effort involving all departments and the SBCCD employees, law enforcement agencies and community.

It is no secret how college life can be stressful. Collegiates need to balance and fit their time attending club meetings, training and competing at sports tournaments while at the same time ensuring that their grades do not suffer amidst these activities. But what would you do when it's late in the day, and there is an important examination the following morning and have not even started going through your notes? Several college students have found a risky solution: study drugs.

Study drugs or so-called "smart drugs" are prescription stimulants that are used to increase mental focus and productivity for the inappropriate purpose of studying. These drugs are commonly prescribed to treat Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD) and Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), but are now being misused to get a short-term boost of energy to go through the night and achieve focus while studying.

Risk vs. Rewards

Although study drugs may help improve focus and motivation to study, the short-term benefits of these drugs come with risks as well. Taking prescription stimulants (such as Adderall or Ritalin) are more likely to cause restlessness and euphoria. Those who use these drugs on occasion to study are more likely to crash once its effects have worn off.

The crash causes exhaustion and depression. It also has short-term risks of increased blood pressure, increased heart rate, nervousness and insomnia. Adderall in particular can cause hallucinations, impulsive behavior, paranoia and irritability. Because of its high potential for dependency and addiction, prescription stimulants are known to cause adverse side effects which can lead to more serious health conditions, and worse, death.

Apart from all these physiological and psychological effects, misusing prescription drugs, with or without prescription, is illegal. You may face serious legal consequences such as fines, jail time and suspension from school.
