Pokemon Go

"SAFETY" Tips

Make sure someone knows your itinerary

Let someone know where you'll be going to catch Pokémon and roughly when you'll return. "Pokémon Go" is also played exclusively on mobile phones, so there's no excuse to neglect checking in if plans change.

Don't go out alone

The buddy system is especially important when playing "Pokémon Go." This is always sound advice whenever you're exploring new neighborhoods — you can always use a spare phone in case yours loses power, right? — but the game also rewards those who play together.

Some of the rarest creatures in "Pokémon Go" will only appear if more than one person is roaming around a given area.

Stay alert late at night

Or don't play at all long after the sun goes down. Some of the game's most notorious incidents have occurred late at night. That's when Michael Baker was stabbed on his search for Pokémon in Forest Grove. It's also when a mob descended on Central Park when a Vaporeon happened to spawn within its limits.

Although some of the game's creatures are more common at night, there are still places in and around Portland that spawn such Pokémon as Gastly and Clefairy during daylight hours. There's no real advantage to playing "Pokémon Go" after dark.

Several police departments across the country warn players against straggling — it's easy enough to pick off a phone from an unsuspecting victim if he or she is standing idly on the sidewalk, eyes glued to a glowing screen.

Watch where you're going

Although the game uses a virtual map where players can track Pokémon throughout real-world locations, it's not necessary to constantly watch the screen.

"Pokémon Go" has a vibration function that makes it so your smartphone rumbles when a creature appears. If this feature is on, it's easy enough to activate the app, stick the phone in a pocket and wait for the vibration.

Alternately, turning the game's music off also makes it easy to hear when a Pokémon pops up on the display — the creatures make a recognizable sound when they come up on the map.

Don't bike/skateboard/DRIVE and play

Distracted driving, regardless of the vehicle, is a bad idea.
