The California Office of Traffic Safety is again announcing that September is 'California Pedestrian Safety Month' which began last year in response to the rising number of pedestrians being killed and injured on California roadways.

This month draws attention to the 892 pedestrians who were killed on California roadways in 2016 alone, accounting for over 24 percent of all roadways deaths in the state, up from 17 percent just a decade ago. Most injuries are life changing and permanent.

Both drivers and walkers are cautioned to put down the cell phones since electronic distractions are seen in increasing numbers of pedestrian crashes. Other factors for drivers include unsafe speed and failure to see and yield to pedestrians in crosswalks and intersections. For pedestrians, the major dangers are jaywalking and thinking that they can be seen at night, especially while wearing dark clothing. To learn about the dangers of being a pedestrian, who is at risk, and get safety tips visit .

The California Office of Traffic Safety continues to remind motorists that " This public service announcement highlights the importance of pedestrian safety awareness, regardless of whether one is on foot or behind the wheel.
